

Mother's Secret by John C. Mannone

Liquor ambers the crystal glass, whose stem rises from the licorice-black lacquer of the Baby Grand. In the half-shade of morning, between sweet sips, her fingers glide over the keys. The sonata intoxicates her ear deaf to the sound of her son entering the room, to the spilling of secrets.